Ucross Foundation announces a new initiative to support the work of contemporary Native American visual artists. Eligible disciplines include painting, sculpture, printmaking, photography, video, performance art, installation, and ceramics.

The Ucross Fellowship for Native American Visual Artists begins in spring 2018.

The Fellowship will provide up to a one-month residency at Ucross and a stipend of $1,000. Each Fellow will be featured in an exhibition at the Ucross Art Gallery during the year following the residency. An exhibition brochure will be produced for each exhibition.

Founded in 1981, Ucross is situated on an historic 20,000 working cattle ranch on the High Plains of northeastern Wyoming, in the Powder River Basin near the Bighorn Mountains. The residency program provides individual work space, living accommodations, meals, uninterrupted time and the experience of the majestic landscape to competitively selected individuals. Ucross Native American Visual Arts Fellows will be part of a group of ten residents at one time – typically a mix of four writers, two composers, and four visual artists. Residents come from throughout the United States and the world.

Visual art studios are approximately 400 square feet and the facilities include one print studio with an Elephant etching press. Residents are responsible for any materials used in their work and for their own travel expenses to Sheridan or Buffalo, Wyoming. Arrangements for the use of a ceramics studio at nearby Sheridan College need to be made in advance.

Applications are reviewed by a rotating panel of experts in the field of visual art. The quality of an applicant's work is given primary consideration. Individuals from all stages of their professional careers are invited to apply.

Two Ucross Fellowships for Native American Visual Artists will be awarded in 2018, one each in the spring and fall residency sessions. For the Spring 2018 Fellowship, the deadline is October 1, 2017, for a residency taking place between late February and early June, 2018. For the Fall 2018 Fellowship, the deadline is March 1, 2018, for a residency taking place between August and early December.
